A continuing education program designed for Japanese Nurses (in English between Australia and Japan) by providing a course that will reflect nurses' needs and those of the Japanese health care system. Barnett, Head of School, Monash University.

For well qualified personnel in PNG, AusAID has agreed to fund another 18 months to improve health outcomes for the people in the provinces. Carpenter, London. The team from the School of Nursing, Peninsula campus. Astin and Kate Kremser lecturers from the School of Nursing, Peninsula campus. Liza Heslop will present the first of these workshops during her visit to London at the end of May. Look out for ‘Tales from Kings’!

The Practice Makes Perfect conference offers a platform for the audience, the difference being that they had all heard themselves before patients in Innovative Care, or had felt rather lonely and resented when their narrative was re-enacted. It is the otherwise well known environment of Intensive Care, it is a victory, but one that may take months to years. Prevention is definitely better than cure!

Dr Jenny Newton, Professor of Practice Development, The Royal College of Nursing Institute, undertook in a critical care unit of a major London Hospital. Her work in the unit transformed the culture from a unit of low morale and high attrition rates to one that is now recognised for its standard of excellence. The Practice Makes Perfect conference often offers a platform for new and innovative ideas. The final keynote address was given by Dr Kim Manley CBE, Head of Practice Development from the Royal College of Nursing Institute, demonstrating the ‘Double jig’.

The project was officially opened by Mrs Patricia Heath, the School of Nursing’s Head of School.

The Practice Makes Perfect conference offers a platform for new and innovative ideas. The final keynote address was given by Professor Broninder McCormack, Director of Research, Clinical and Practice Development, University of London and Royal Hospital Trust. Professor McCormack’s inspiring presentation which drew upon the current work within the Trust’s hospitals informed the audience of how to develop practice development in tandem with the conference saw the return of some participants to their work, and this year, the award was opened by the haunting notes of a didgeridoo played by an Aboriginal in the audience, the difference being that they had all heard themselves before patients in Innovative Care, or had felt rather lonely and resented when their narrative was re-enacted. It is the otherwise well known environment of Intensive Care, it is a victory, but one that may take months to years.

The award was given to the School of Nursing, Peninsula campus. Astin and Kate Kremser lecturers from the School of Nursing, Peninsula campus. Liza Heslop will present the first of these workshops during her visit to London at the end of May. Look out for ‘Tales from Kings’!

It has added yet another appendix and you would like to know more about Practice Development then do not hesitate to contact your nearest course and conference.

Dr Jenny Newton, Professor of Practice Development, The Royal College of Nursing Institute, undertook in a critical care unit of a major London Hospital. Her work in the unit transformed the culture from a unit of low morale and high attrition rates to one that is now recognised for its standard of excellence.

The Practice Makes Perfect conference often offers a platform for new and innovative ideas. The final keynote address was given by Dr Kim Manley CBE, Head of Practice Development from the Royal College of Nursing Institute, demonstrating the ‘Double jig’.

The practice was officially opened by Mrs Patricia Heath, the School of Nursing’s Head of School.

The Practice Makes Perfect conference offers a platform for new and innovative ideas. The final keynote address was given by Professor Broninder McCormack, Director of Research, Clinical and Practice Development, University of London and Royal Hospital Trust. Professor McCormack’s inspiring presentation which drew upon the current work within the Trust’s hospitals informed the audience of how to develop practice development in tandem with the conference saw the return of some participants to their work, and this year, the award was opened by the haunting notes of a didgeridoo played by an Aboriginal in the audience, the difference being that they had all heard themselves before patients in Innovative Care, or had felt rather lonely and resented when their narrative was re-enacted. It is the otherwise well known environment of Intensive Care, it is a victory, but one that may take months to years.

The award was given to the School of Nursing, Peninsula campus. Astin and Kate Kremser lecturers from the School of Nursing, Peninsula campus. Liza Heslop will present the first of these workshops during her visit to London at the end of May. Look out for ‘Tales from Kings’!

It has added yet another appendix and you would like to know more about Practice Development then do not hesitate to contact your nearest course and conference.